

Lila Oriard

Teaching Fellow

Lila Oriard, from Mexico City, is a Ph.D. on street vending as a factor of urban transformation at the Development Planning Unit, University College London in 2015. She is an international Teaching Fellow at the Faculty of Planning, CEPT University where she teaches Spatial Planning, Environmental Design, and Area Planning Studio for Masters in Planning. She completed her B. Arch. in Mexico City in 2002, MSc. in urban and regional planning in the University of Venice in 2005, and M Phil at the Institute of Urbanism of Paris in 2008. She was visiting fellow under the Urban Knowledge Network Asia in 2013 and 2014 at CEPT University to conduct research on Indian planning policies for street vendors. As a practitioner, she has nine years of experience in developing master plans in the region of Paris, France. She conducted research in Mexico and India related to the informal economy in developing countries and its relation to space, specifically street vending as a complex commercial system linked to space at multiple scales.